Woman's Province. THE DUTIES OF THE GENTLER SEX-

What a great task is assigned to woman. Its dignity can not be elevated. It is not her province to make laws, to lead armies, nor to be at the head of great enterprises, but to her is given the power to form those by whom the laws are made, to teach the leaders of mighty armies and the governors of vast empires. She is required to guard against having the slightest taint of bodily infirmity touch the frail creature whose moral, intellecttual and physical being is derived from her. She must instil correct principles, inculcate right doctrines, and breathe into the soul of her offspring those pure sentiments which in time to come will be a part of themselves, and bless generations ments which in time to come will be a part of themselves, and bless generations yet unborn. Yes, to woman is given the blessed privilege of aiding the sufferer in all the various stages of his existence. She smiles screnely at the christening, and weeps at the burial, while she sootles the bereaved heart. This is her province and duty. Yet how can she fulfill her mission unless possessed of a strong and healthy body? The preparation of Dr. S. B. Hartman, and known as Peruna, is just the thing for persons suffering from a mathe thing for persons suffering from a ma-jority of the complaints incident to this climate. It is invaluable to women, and Mrs. J. W. Reynolds of New Lisbon, Columbiana county, Ohio, is a noted example of what the medicine can do. She says she has suffered for years with consays she has suffered for years with congestion of the lungs, catarri in the head, and was troubled with a bad cough. She had tried a number of physicians, but they all failed to cure her. She was induced to try Paruna, and immediately a marked change took place. After using one bottle her cough ceased and in a short time her other aliments were cured. She is now completely restored to health, and gives all the credit to Paruna. Mr. J. W. Reynolds, her husband, was a confirmed invalid. He could not sleep well, neither could he work. He used Paruna, and as a result, was completely restored neither could be work. He used Peruna, and as a result, was completely restored to his former vigor and strength. He says he now feels like a new man.

Mr. Bernhardt Seubs, St. Clair, St. Clair county, Mich., says: "I have thoroughly tried your Peruna in the various diseases to which parents and a large family of children are ever liable, and I find it in every case to be just the thing needed. No family can honestly be without it."

Nancy Feterman, Cookport, Indiana County, Pa., says: "Gentlemen: Your valuable Peruna is the best medicine I ever fised."

THE FRAXINELLA. TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

this earth, I believe there is nothing which excels the dreariness of a rainy day in Venice. Rainy days are uncomfortable everywhere, but in Venice they are simply dispiriting. In the highlands the rain nay bave even a peculiar fascination, when, in white, gauzy clouds, it hovers walls of the palaces, changing them into diemai looking ruins, when it drizzles down upon the quiet, stagnant waters of the lagoons, when the gondolas seek protection beneath the bridges and portices and the pigeons in the crevices of the walls, then a foreigner falls into despair, and from the recesses of his trunk draws forth "The Book of Martyrs" or something similarly exhilarating, places it upon the window sill, and, with his chin resting upon his elbows, stares into vacancy. Nothing consoling about you, you feel cast from the world upon a forlorn, gloomy island, and as though never again green fields, bright flowers or the happy sunshine were to delight your eyes; and after half an hour of this sort of thing, there is half an hour of this sort of thing, there is man. She had known it long ago, and secretly amused herself about it. But when Bellini, with the most poetical and select phrases, with many sighs and a sent-mental casting up of his eyes, spoke to her of his undying, invincible, unbounded love and passion, she could not help it, she broke into a merry peal of laughter. And when Bellini showed her his startled, perfectly, miserable countenance, she took up a small looking glass that was lying on the table beside her and held it up before the him.

the table beside her and held it up before him.

"Why, my dear Bellini, just look in here!" she eadd, hardly knowing whatshe was doing, but following her first childish impulses. She thought that the best answer, and an excuse for her mirth.

Bellini turned yellow with rage, but neverthless looked into the glass. He saw a smoothly-combed young man with heart-shaped mouth, mild forget-me-not syes and an irrepreachable necktic.

"Well," and he looked at her as though he meant to say: "I think I am a rather fair representative of the sex, I'm sure."

Then Mērio seemed almost embarrassed. She could not tell him that it was not on account of his looks that she did not care for him, but on account of his silly, effeminate, soft way of behaving. She could say: "Look ot yourself, you lackadaisical, illieless creature, an then look at mo, the wild, passionate Spanish girl, with over lawning best and "she checked her" she checked her wild, passionate Spanish girl, with over-lowing heart and—" she checked her houghts, and simply said; "My dearest Bellini, don't you see that it is all non-

And the fair Marie closed her little dis-course with a laugh and playfully drag-ged the Fraxinelia across lellini's face. when, in white, gaury clouds, it novers round the rocks, until their sharp and jagged edges suddenly seem to tear them Into tatters, whirling them in every direction. In the lowlands it often produces a refreshed feeling within us, when we gaze upon the pearly drops, sparkling in the grass and upon the bright green leaves. But in Venice, when it moistens the grey, crumbling walls of the palaces, changing them into dismal looking rains, when it drights of free palaces, changing them into dismal looking rains, when it drights longed for rest."

Nothing consoling about you, you feel cast from the world upon a forlorn, gloomy island, and as though never again green fields, bright flowers or the happy smashine were to delight your eyes; and after half an hour of this sort of thing, there is but one wish alive in your crushed bosom, and that is—to die.

And on such a day, such a disconsolate, wretched, rainy day, a star and a genius sat opposite one another in the Palazza Ginstiniani. They sat upon the balcony of the palazza, and the sfar gazed upon the gray lugoons towards San Georgic, which were surrounded with long, flowing weeds, upon which the rain trickled with monotonous regularity.

The star was a lively, stender little woman, with flashing black eyes, her hair saucily arranged and silken ringlets on the forehead, dreesed in plain white mustlin, sprinkled with plnk ribbons and orange buds. Every nerve and feature vibrated in the brown little face, which was one of Spanish perfection, and her fingers drummed impatiently upon the rug hanging over the balustrade of the balcony.

The genius, her vis-a-vis, was a slenderly built young man, with pale, sunoothly brushed, perfumed hair, languishing eyes, wan countenance, a very thin straggling little heard, a suit of such perfect fit that the young man found it impossible to bend either knee or elbow. To judge him by live of the first hard the young man found it impossible to bend either knee or elbow. To judge him by live of the first hard the young man found it impossible to bend either knee or elbow. To judge him by live of the first hard the young man found it impossible to bend either knee or elbow. To judge him by live of the first hard the young man found it impossible to be defined the first hard the sum of the first hard the sum of the first hard the su by his outward appearance, you would pronounce him a most brainless dude. His voice was very high and weak, another disagreeable addition to his already effeminate and foppish exterior, and he spoke in a whining doleful tone, somewhat the the rain drizzling down before him.

The star was Marie Malibran, and the genius was Vincenxo Bellini. She was starring in the Venice Theatre this season, and Bellini, ir honor of ker, had directed his "Sonnambula" last evening. And on this wretched day he had expressed to her his words what every movement, every look had long since told her—that he loved her!

And Marie had laughed. She could not help-it, the passionste little Spazish wood where and season had been also brated violuist. And one day Cupid's brated violuist. And Marie had laughed. She could not help it, the passionate little Spaxish woman. She had known it long ago, and secrety amused heraelf about it. came his wife.

Bellini bore his love—or his "amittenness," as the light thinking world called it, with sentimental despondency, as long as he knew her to be free and devoted to as he knew her to be free and devoted to her art. But as soon as she became the wife of De Bertot, passion, a wild fierce passion of pealousy and hatred took possession of him, and his mildness and amishility, turned into misanthropy and irascibility. Whenever they chanced to meet, his eyes would rest upon her with uniterable reproach and nameless sorrow. And Marle no longer laughed; she knew now what it was to love and felt what a terrible thing it must be to have it trilled with. She trembled at Bellini's approach, with dark presentiments and fear, and with. She trembled at Bellini's approach with dark presentiments and fear, and avoided him. And atrangely, his dark meascing glances mingled with bitter reproach and sorrow seemed to have crept into his music. When she heard it, when she sang it, she had a suffocating feeling, as though she were being strangled, and so she ceased singling his roles and gave her entire attention to Rossanii's repertoire. She gang "Rosica," "Desdemona," "Minetta," then "Fidelma," in Cimarosa's "Matrimonio Segreto," in short everything but "Norma" "Sonnambula" or "Romeo."—"Romeo" with his heart-rending sobs and moans.
